Dear Minister Kent:

Re: Erosion of Public Participation on the Environment in Canada

On October 13, 2011, the federal government dealt a blow to public engagement in environmental decision making in Canada by informing the Canadian Environmental Network/ Réseau canadien de l'environnement (RCEN) by letter that it would not renew its financial support for 2011-12. As member organizations that are adversely affected by this decision, we request that you reverse this decision and restore core funding to the RCEN.

Established in 1977, the RCEN has facilitated communication between environmental non-governmental organizations (ENGOS) and the federal government, guided by its mission to facilitate networking and to provide public input on policies and practices affecting the environment and health. Since its inception, the RCEN has received core funding from Environment Canada. This funding is used to maintain a small staff at its national office, and to assist its regional affiliated networks across the country in their public engagement activities.

The RCEN consists of over 640 highly diverse non-profit organizations, including national organizations and community-based groups across Canada. Its members are environmental stewards of Canada, many of whom work tirelessly and mainly voluntarily on a broad range of issues. The RCEN is the thread that binds these groups. The RCEN has played an integral role in supporting the efforts of Canadian ENGOS to protect human health and the environment, especially for vulnerable populations. The RCEN is a clearinghouse for information on federal government environmental policies and decisions. We find this service invaluable for our work. ENGOS from abroad regard the RCEN as a unique model for networking, one worth emulating in their own countries.

For nearly 34 years, the RCEN has helped to develop collaboration among local, regional and national organizations on environmental matters. It has enabled its members, as representatives of the broader ENGO community, to actively engage in numerous broad-ranging consultations with the federal government, in parliamentary hearings, and in international negotiations. Contributions of RCEN member organizations have been essential to key law reforms initiatives, such as the Canadian Environmental Protection Act (CEPA), and the Canadian Environmental Assessment Act (CEAA).

Under CEPA 1999, the federal government has committed to “encourage the participation of the people of Canada in the making of decisions that affect the environment;” (section 2(e)). The presence of the RCEN is key to ensuring public engagement by Canadian civil society. The absence of government funding to the RCEN is contrary to the spirit of the CEPA 1999. In fact, the federal government is clearly signalling its lack of commitment to provide support for meaningful public participation through the RCEN.

Without the services and operational structure provided by the RCEN, ENGOs face significant challenges to track and respond effectively to proposed environmental protection matters and collaborate with one another on issues of common interest. Not only will this action result in a much lower level of public engagement and response by the public, it will undermine transparency in government decision-making processes on environmental protection initiatives.

In the last fiscal year, the RCEN received core funding of approximately $550,000. The cost to government to provide this core funding is a very small price to pay for the benefits accrued by including civil society representatives in government-led consultations on program and legislative reform initiatives.

The loss of federal financial support to the RCEN represents a tremendous loss for public engagement for environmental organizations across Canada and for all Canadians. The impacts will be felt not only now, but for years to come.

Our organizations are concerned that with greatly diminished capacity for public participation, the voices of Canadian ENGOs will not be heard. The erosion of public participation, coupled with severe cut-backs to Environment Canada and other departments addressing environmental protection, puts our health and environment, especially for vulnerable populations, at serious risk. This is a loss for civil society as a whole and a loss for democracy.

Canadians today, and our future generations, need a healthy environment. Our organizations, from coast to coast to coast are seeking commitment from the government to take the necessary steps to strengthen public engagement and promote transparency on environmental and health matters.

We are therefore urging you to restore core funding to the RCEN.

We look forward to your response and welcome the opportunity to discuss these issues with you.

Thank you for your consideration in this vital matter.

Sincerely,
